GEORGE CLARK REID [4 r; mar. – no details]

Brook Street nos. 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and Meadow View (Hammond). Apart from Tithe no. 417, It is difficult to allocated these properties from the available information. All had gone by the 1939 Census. Before the by-pass was built there were two bungalows here.

Tithe 417

By George Courthop's will dated 8 March 1781 he gave a messuage, etc., in Snodland, late occupied by Thomas Jeffery, a butcher, to the use of his great grandchildren: Elizabeth Courthop How, Judith How, George How and Francis How, children of his grandson Francis How. Courthop had been the miller at Holborough since the 1720s, but had moved to Wouldham, where he died. In 1783 Francis How found that the tenement 'is in so very ruinous and decayed a state that the rents thereof will not put and keep the same in repair' and because 'it is too long before the children become 21', he sold the property to John Manley for £40 [KHL, U1436/T2, dated July 1783]. John Manley died in October 1797 and in his will dated 6 October (he was buried on the 9th) he mentions a leasehold estate held from Dean and Chapter of Rochester and occupied by Richard Martin of Snodland. In view of the later evidence that they leased this property, this is probably the same house and land. Martin (1751-1838) was assessed for this property between 1813 and 1823.

John Dartnell (1761-1769) and James Dartnell (1763-1837) owned and occupied the property from 1803 to James's death on 8 Jan 1837, when he bequeathed it to his sister Charlotte, wife of Thomas Faulkner (1774-1856). At this time it was owned by the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. Jacob Faulkner (1800-1855), her brother-in-law, is listed as owner at the 1844 Tithe assessment (and also as owner of nos. 420-422); both Jacob and Charlotte were living at tithe 417 at the 1841 and 1851 censuses. Jacob died in a fire in the workhouse at Strood and was buried at St Nicholas Strood on 21 Oct 1855. The property was owned by Edward Jupp (of Halling?) between 1855 and 1861 and Richard Wray became the occupant then.

JACOB FAULKNER [extract from Morning Chronicle, 17 October 1855] Yesterday afternoon an inquiry was resumed before Mr. J. Lewis, coroner for Rochester, at North Aylesford Union workhouse, Strood, touching the death of Jacob Faulkner, a labourer, employed in the chalk pits of Mr. Wm. Lee, M.P., at Snodland, who came by his death from injuries received about three weeks ago, he having had his clothes set on fire by a fellow-workman whilst asleep in a building in the chalk pit. The poor fellow was admitted into the workhouse on the 26th of September, where he has received every attention both from the surgeon, Mr. Langston, and Mr. Baker, the master. A few days after his admission, he had an attack of dysentery, which according to the modest evidence, accelerated death. On Tuesday last the deposition of the unfortunate man was taken before Mr. R. Clements, mayor, and three days afterwards death terminated his sufferings.

Mr. Richard Baker, master of the North Aylesford Union workhouse, at Strood, was the first witness examined: He stated that on Wednesday the 26th of September last, the deceased came to the union and was placed in the infirmary, and was put under the care of the surgeon of the union. He was in a bad state from injuries caused by burning. He told witness he had been burned by a man named Tilbey. He remained in the infirmary until his death yesterday morning. He was supplied with every necessary. Deceased told witness that he had been burnt on the Friday previous to the 21st of September.
